The need for more and better quality jobs in green sectors is highlighted in the report. The report also notes that the transition to a green economy will create significant opportunities for job growth and decent work. However, the transition will also require the phasing-out of outdated coal power.

Renewable energy sources, such as solar, wind, and geothermal, are highlighted as key components of a green economy. The report also notes that the transition to a green economy will require significant investments in infrastructure, research and development, and skills training.
